

Core Pain Points

High Costs & Fees

Generic C2C platforms charge steep commissions (15–23%) and high shipping costs, directly impacting students' limited finances.

Lack of Trust & Safety

Open platforms with unverified users create low-trust environments for both transactions and meetups.

Fragmented Experience

Students juggle multiple apps—Trendyol for e-commerce, others for social needs—creating an inconvenient campus experience.

Unmet Niche Needs

Mainstream platforms don't support student-specific use cases like note-trading, calculator rentals, or tutoring services

No integrated social features. E-commerce platforms are purely transactional and miss the opportunity to foster real student community and connection.

Main platforms (e.g., Dolap, Sahibinden.com) are generic and nationwide. They aren't designed for local, campus-based exchanges—resulting in shipping, coordination, and trust issues.

They prioritize volume, not community. Their business models focus on scale and high fees, not on creating safe, tailored student environments.
